The philosopher Immanuel Kant believed there was an inherent problem with searching for happiness in things like love, wealth, and success.

The happiness problem: why Kant thought you'd never be ...

Kant can thus be seen as addressing a problem which is also of concern to present-day philosophers of biology: how to make sense of the idea that biological entities and processes can have purposes or functions without presupposing the existence of a divine designer. A number of interpreters have recently drawn on Kant to propose a solution to the problem, although without necessarily agreeing ...

Kant's Aesthetics and Teleology (Stanford Encyclopedia of ...

One problem with this view, Kant believes, is that there is no such representational content that is invariably present in experience, so the sense of an ongoing self cannot possibly arise from that non-existent content (what Locke calls "consciousness") being present in each of one's representations. In Kant's words, self-consciousness "does not yet come about by my accompanying ...

Immanuel Kant (Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy)

Kant ran into a problem with his theory that the mind plays a part in producing objective knowledge. Intuitions and categories are entirely disparate, so how can they interact? Kant's solution is the (transcendental) schema: a priori principles by which the transcendental imagination connects concepts with intuitions through time. All the principles are temporally bound, for if a concept is ...

480 quotes from Immanuel Kant: 'We are not rich by what we possess but by what we can do without.', 'He who is cruel to animals becomes hard also in his dealings with men. We can judge the heart of a man by his treatment of animals.', and 'Act in such a way that you treat humanity, whether in your own person or in the person of any other, never merely as a means to an end, but always at the ...

Immanuel Kant Quotes (Author of Critique of Pure Reason)

Kant's aim was to move beyond the traditional dichotomy between rationalism and empiricism. The ... requires that we frame the epistemological problem in an entirely different way. The crucial question is not how we can bring ourselves to understand the world, but how the world comes to be understood by us. Instead of trying, by reason or experience, to make our concepts match the nature of ...

Kant: Judgments - Philosophy Pages

Transcendental idealism is a philosophical system founded by German philosopher Immanuel Kant in the 18th century. Kant's epistemological program is found throughout his Critique of Pure Reason (1781). By transcendental (a term that deserves special clarification) Kant means that his philosophical approach to knowledge transcends mere consideration of sensory evidence and requires an ...

The Problem With Utilitarianism . In Kant's view, the basic problem with utilitarianism is that it judges actions by their consequences. If your action makes people happy, it's good; if it does the reverse, it's bad. But is this actually contrary to what we might call moral common sense? Consider this question: Who is the better person, the millionaire who gives $1,000 to charity in ...

What You Should Know About Kant's Ethics in a Nutshell

This notion of ethics, then, is not based on consequences, as is the doctrine for example in utilitarianism. Kant recognizes the consequences of our decisions are not entirely within our control. Yet, for Kant, is there a problem with event-description in following pure practical reason? No two situations in our experience are exactly alike. How much of a difference would make a difference in ...

Kantian Ethics

Kant himself was well aware of this consequence of his theory, and he believed it to be correct. Thinking that one should lie to save someone's life is, for Kant, making a mistake about the nature of the moral law. It is not a hypothetical imperative, which tells you what you ought to do under certain conditions (such as those conditions in which it will lead to favorable outcomes) - it is a ...

tesy, reserve and so forth," in an attempt to be happy. 11 Kant bluntly states, "The problem of determining surely and universally which action would promote the happiness of a rational being is completely insoluble." 12 This is the case because "happiness is not an ideal of reason but of imagination." 13 This inability to choose actions that will undoubtedly result in happiness ...

The Role of Happiness in Kant's Ethics - Aporia

Freedom enters Kant's moral philosophy as the solution to a problem. The categorical imperative is not analytic, and disregarding its claims is therefore not inconsistent. Yet it is supposed to present us with a rational necessity. In order to show that morality is not a "mere phantom of the mind"(G 4: 445/64), Kant seeks to provide a deduction of (or a credential for) the moral law: he must ...

Morality as Freedom

Although his work continues to influence work in aesthetics, Kant falls victim to the same problem that touches everyone who tries to make general claims about art: the very concept of art has great historical fluidity so that we can never nail down for all time exactly what it is. Kant's account of beauty as based in subjective feeling as well as his struggles with teleology stem from his ...

Yet, Kant has a problem here. For my knowledge of myself as an individual agent and of my personhood is sensible—a matter of mere experience; my apparent knowledge of myself is knowledge of just another appearance in a world of appearances (Kant, 2 p A38/B55). But the personhood that puts me beyond price has its roots in the intelligible world, and has, for that reason, no appearance. In ...

According to Kant, we should look at our maxims, or intentions, of the particular action. Kantians believe "human life is valuable because humans are the bearers of rational life" (O'Neill 414). In other words, humans are free rational beings capable of rational behavior and should not be used purely for the enjoyment or happiness of another. On the other hand, Utilitarians believe that ...
