Nurse Educators and Politics-Sondra Z. Koff 2004-01-01 Although they represent a significant majority of American health care providers, nurses have had only a limited influence on policy developments in the health care and political systems. Helping to understand why the profession has remained a "sleeping giant," "Nurse Educators and "Politics focuses on a primary socialization agent to the profession: nursing faculty members. Using survey data, Sondra Z. Koff examines nurse educators' attitudes toward select public policies and political participation, as well as their political and organizational activism. These findings are related to nursing's professional history and are discussed in a broader political context to better understand nurses behavior in the decision-making process.

Policy and Politics in Nursing and Health Care-Diana Mason 2015-05-28
Politics and Policy- 2012
Politically Active Nurses-Kristen Noelle Connor 2014 BACKGROUND: With more than 3.5 million registered nurses in the United States, the nursing profession has the largest number of health care professionals and provides the greatest percentage of health care in the United States. However, the policy-development role of nurses is small when compared to the size of the profession. Professional nurses have the expertise as well as the potential to influence health and social policy through a variety of activities and roles. Nurses elected to congress, like the Hon. Lois Capps of California and those who are Presidential appointees like HRSA Director, Mary Wakefield, attest to such expertise. Nurses must be proactive and find ways to increase their participation. PURPOSE: The purpose of this study is to describe the lived experiences of nurses who have transitioned into politically influential roles. This exploratory study will uncover factors that motivated and challenged nurses as they became activists and will identify successful strategies that supported their efforts. The findings can be used to inspire the next generation of nurses to become political activists, and facilitate and promote their participation. SAMPLE OF POPULATION: The study sample included four registered nurses residing within the Greater Sacramento region who have been active in policy and politics in a variety of paid and unpaid roles METHODS: This study used elite interviews comprised of a brief demographics survey and semi-structured questions. RESULTS: The participants held multiple positions, volunteer and paid, in their communities and within local and state government. Multiple factors were found to promote the participation of nurses in health policy. These included social factors, mentors and support system, catalysts for entry, nursing identity, and education and exposure to politics. The barriers to their participation included gender, time, money, privacy and negativity, and bipartisan politics. The participants suggested that by providing health and social policy education and encouraging exposure to political activities during all levels of nursing education would increase and facilitate political participation within the nursing profession. Three themes were found after compiling the results: progression of participation, evolution of the woman factor, and self-motivation. IMPLICATIONS: Based on findings, nursing educators must identify ways to augment nursing curricula to provide nurses, at all education levels, the knowledge and experiences needed to effectively participate as health care professionals in political forums. Additionally, in response to the lack of male nurses in political roles, it is important to conduct research to identify tactics needed to elicit their interest and active participation as well.

Bodies and Souls—Assistant Professor of History and of Gender and Women’s Studies Katrin Schultheiss 2001 This political history shows how the turmoil and transformation of nursing during the French Third Republic reflected the political and cultural tensions at work in the nation, including critical conflicts over the role of the Church in society, the professionalization of medicine, and the emancipation of women.

The Politics of Nursing Knowledge—Anne Marie Rafferty 2002-09-11 The Politics of Nursing Knowledge puts into context the historical factors which have shaped and sometimes limited the development of nurse education. Anne Marie Rafferty makes a critical reappraisal of Florence Nightingale's vision of nursing and looks at how training and policy-making have evolved from the origins of hospital reform in the 1860s to the start of the National Health Service in 1948. Highlighting the contemporary issues confronting all those in training, the book questions the extent to which nursing fits into the mould of both a profession and an academic discipline. Based on substantial new research, The Politics of Nursing Knowledge is a valuable resource for nursing students at undergraduate and postgraduate levels.

Nurses and Politics—Chris Hart 2003-10-23 The most controversial book on nursing written in over a decade, Nurses and Politics explains the key contemporary issues facing both student and qualified nurses. Written in an entertaining and engaging style, it provides a detailed and devastating analysis of two flagship government policies: Agenda for Change (the new pay system for nurses and other health workers) and Foundation Hospitals. Yet it looks beyond passing trends and events to get under the skin of what it is that makes nurses and nursing tick, analysing nursing's mythology and history, as well as its internal organisation and place within the NHS. The book is the first to make a clear link between violence to nurses, bullying, stress and whistleblowing, while addressing other issues such as nurse education, clinical practice, policy and service development within the NHS and funding. Nurses and Politics also explores how nurses are trapped within insidious power structures that not only damage their interests but rob them of the authority and confidence to resolve the problems they face in their daily work. Importantly, it ends with a chapter of potential solutions and hope for nurses and the work they love. Extensively researched and referenced, Nurses and Politics is essential reading for anyone interested in the future of nursing.

Nursing in the European Union-Sondra Z. Koff 2016-08 Nursing in the European Union demonstrates how the European Union (EU) has refashioned the nursing world throughout the Member States via its power in many other policy domains. Volume 1 focused on the EU’s impact on nursing education, regulation, and research endeavors. This volume focuses on real-life situations and problems EU nurses face—wages, stress, work environments, and dispute resolution—and places them in a comparative perspective. In this unique work, Sondra Z. Koff develops a profile of nurses' workplaces, highlighting similarities and diversities, challenges, and nurses' opinions. Though it has limited formal authority in the health and health care sectors, the EU has had a significant impact on the working life of these practitioners in areas such as employment options, industrial relations and their outcomes, organizational and environmental features of nurses' workplaces, collective action, and more. New policies and legalities are regulating the production, distribution, practices, and organization of nursing according to supranational standards. Koff helps to fill a gap in the literature, given the dearth of comparative, cross-national, book-length studies of the nursing profession. By adopting a framework focused on an institution, policies, and politics, Koff addresses these topics from the perspective of multiple actors, both national and international.
