Politeness in Language Studies: In Its History, Theory and Practice

Sara Mills (2003, 2010) has argued that women are necessarily always polite, that politeness is a gender-based phenomenon, and that politeness is an aspect of gender inequality. Mills discusses the complex relations between gender and politeness and argues that although there are differences in the ways that men and women use language, these differences are not always due to gender. She argues that politeness can be seen as a form of social control, and that the language of politeness can be used to maintain social order and to reinforce gender inequality.
