Theories of Development - Crain, 6th Edition

Chapter 1: Introduction to the Study of Development

- Children do not set themselves apart from nature, but experience it with an instinctive empathy. However, they are not simply present to nature; they are part of it. Their experience is shaped by their interactions with the natural environment.

- According to Crain (2013), children's understanding of the world is shaped by their experiences and interactions with the natural environment. They are not simply passive observers; they are active participants in the shaping of their environment.
